

in my mind that the weapon discharged by itself when the safety was released. Maybe it was just a once in a million happening, but once is enough for me.

Since you feel you should not refinish the rifle and scope and make it safe, I will sell the gun immediately upon receiving it and purchase the rest of my arms from hereon out from Winchester. I know to a big corporation like Remington, losing one little lifetime customer means nothing, but at least I'll have the satisfaction of not doing business with you and discouraging many people I come in contact with from buying Remington arms.

I should have taken it to an independent gunsmith to start with for an unbiased opinion.
