Dear Remington:

I have a Model 700 rifle in 7mm Rem Mag. that I purchased new about 1978. On two occasions this rifle fired while I was working the safety. Both times it fired in a safe direction and no harm was done. I purchased a different hunting rifle which I have been using for the last six years due to concerns about this issue. I now would like to pass the Model 700 down to my son, but I am concerned about the safety issues surrounding the trigger or safety mechanism. What can be done to insure that this firearm is safe? Could it be returned to your repair department where a new trigger or safety part or design could be installed?

I am hoping to keep this gun in the family as it has been on many successful Colorado elk hunting trips over the years.

Thanks for your help.
