

It is thus suggested and recommended that the Remington Model 1863 rifle, commonly referred to as the (Zouave), be properly cataloged to the credit of the Remington Arms Co. as it was obviously an Ilion creation.

Remington Model 1863 (Zouave) today:

During the Civil War Centennial of 1965 a new growth in demand evolved for the Remington (Zouave) rifle. There is presently an overwhelming demand for this rifle by the men who shoot in muzzle loading skirmishes.

This rifle shows a promising future not only for the shooter but offers much potential to collectors of antique firearms. There is currently foreign made reproductions, showing successful sales in the U. S. of this Remington Model 1863 (Zouave). It seems feasible then to observe that an American reproduction of this highly sought after rifle will be in order.
