Gentlemen:

I have a collection of over 30 rifles and pistols.

Included in this collection is a Remington Model 700 Ser. No. A6373493, 243 Cal. rifle that was bought in the Laredo, Texas area a few years ago from a new gun dealer.

The rifle has been used on and off during our South Texas deer hunting season.

About four or five seasons ago my son Henry III age 13 at the time had an accidental firing of this rifle in my presence. Luckily, he was following all safety criteria, and the bullet did not strike anything. Being a hunter all my life, I did not accept this incident and took drastic action under the assumption that this incident was due to carelessness on the part of the boy and consequently did not let him hunt for the rest of the season so as to drive home a point.

Since he did not hunt, the rifle was not used again for a few years.

Two years ago while hunting and instructing my younger son Carlos on how to unload a rifle before getting on a blind, the rifle went off in my hands. Since I was instructing him on safely the rifle was pointed up. The bullet did not strike anything, and I passed it off as I just must have accidentally pulled the trigger during my demonstration. It was such a shock that I convinced myself that I was responsible for the accidental firing.

The rifle was handed over to Carlos, and he proceeded to climb the deer blind. As I drove off, I heard a shot and immediately returned and was informed by my son that all he had done was loaded the rifle flipped the safety from on to fire once or twice, and the rifle discharged going through the roof of the blind.
