Dear Remington:

My freind and hunting companion sent me a very troubling e-mail this morning about an article from NBC news, regarding the Model 700 bolt Action Rifles. I less than a month ago purchased a Model 700 BDL Custom Deluxe in 300 Rem. Ultra Mag. My brother liked it so much he bought one. And now my hunting partner has one on order all in 300 Ultra Mag. My obvious question is, does this gun have any kind of problem with the safety mechanism? I have gotten very fond of the way this gun shoots, and I am hoping that if there is a problem that it can be fixed. Do I always have to wonder in the back of my mind if the gun will go off when I put it from the safe position to the fire position, or are these concerns unjustified for this newer production gun? What about the locking bolt? Thx. Bruce
