700 ADL

Discussion Thread

10/2/2001 2:18:12 PM

Response (Dell) At 10/02/2001 02:10 PM we wrote -Dear Mr. Bartin, wrote -

We regret that you are unhappy with our new security system. However, we do not recommend switching bolts between rifles because our bolts are individually headspaced with each rifle. The factory will not convert or switch your bolt back to the old style. You may wish to unlock the security system, put your key away and work your safety like you normally do.

Customer (Timothy J. Bartin) Hello, 9/26/2001 4:21:52 PM

Hello, I would like to know if the bolts from the older version 700 ADL before the J-lock system are interchangeable? Can one be used in the other? I have recently attained a new 700 ADL and I am disappointed in the J-lock system and would prefer to have a model that doesn't require a bolt lock and key system. Is this something that was legislated or can I switch bolts in my new gun? I haven't fired the rifle yet so I am wondering if I could trade bolts for one without the J-lock!? I have owned several Remington products and have been pleased with them, but this system is not pleasing to me. Thank you for your time. Sincerely,

Timothy J. Bartin

Subject to Protective Order - Williams v. Remington