1986 I owned a model 700 rifle, that winter while coyote hunting, when I placed the safety on the gun into fire position to unload, the gun fired shattering the bone in my big toe on my right foot. Immediately after, I tried to find someone who could help me replace the safety mechanism. At that time, Remington denied any problems with this type of safety. I finally found a dealer to trade me guns in 2000, he promised to send the gun in to Remington to have the thoroughly inspected. All said, what should I have done in 1986 to have gotten some results? I am still active in outdoor activities, and I still own several Remington firearms. Thanks Kirk
