Dear Sirs:

I used to be a satisfied Remington customer. Back in 1971 or 1972 I was given a new Remington 700. It was a beautiful gun and I loved to use it. Four years ago this all changed. I was out hunting. I had just brought down the bolt to chamber a new round and the gun discharged. I am always very careful when I hunt and I know that I did not touch the trigger. I keep my gun in excellent condition and the temperature was about 75 degrees that day. There was no reason for the gun to go off like that. I took the gun to a Remington dealer in San Antonio for repairs. Nonetheless, I still do not trust the gun and I no longer use it to hunt. I am convinced that the gun is still dangerous.

Sincerely,

Gary Beck
