Dear Mr. Green,

Two months ago I purchased a Remington model XP-100 pistol in 4mm Bench Rest caliber. This purchase was the culmination of a long wait for a firearm that would improve my competitive capability in the metallic silhouette (IHMSA) game. I mentioned long wait, because as you know, this sport can get to be quite expensive given consideration to amount of shooting required to become proficient. I've watched in awe as friends wielding XP-100's have consistently "out shot" me. The fact is that the bolt action XP-100 is superior to the break open Thompson Contender.

Earlier this month I read of your recall on XP-100's for trigger problems in the American Rifleman. I immediately called your toll free number and was ecstatic to learn that my pistol had been repaired prior to leaving the factory. This is the time of the year that I prepare all my ammunition and work on sight settings and improvement of my overall shooting skills for the upcoming summer's competition. To be without my XP-100 right now would be a major setback.
