Whom it May Concern,

On a recent mountain goat hunting trip to Alaska, I had a problem with my Remington 700 SS 338. My guide, Sid Ford (Alaska Hunting & Fishing Ventures), and I made a stalk on a mountain goat and got within two hundred yards of it. I began to take my safety off and the gun fired. I then tried four or five times to rechamber a round, thinking it was a one time accident, but the fire point would not cock. The goat got away but at least I did not hurt my guide or myself. I have since tried to fire the gun again but it again goes off when the safety is being released.

I am a collector of many Remington rifles. I own almost every size and most of the other calibers.

leo.

Upon returning home I spoke to a fellow gun collector about my gun. He told me he had seen a see on 60 minutes or a similar show about a man who had the same problem with his gun but he blew it off of his foot off. This is so my, haven't you recalled the guns correct the safety?

The problem gun is enclosed and am waiting anxiously for your phy.

Sincerely,

David Creamer
