PS 11996

Hello,

I did watch the CNBC story on the Remington model 700 bolt action rifle. I want to say I personally have had this very same thing happen to me with my Remington Model 700 BDL rifle many years ago. I was hunting with relatives up in Canada, when we all came out of the woods for lunch. We all started unloading our rifles. I put my Remington model 700 butt down on my knee with rifle pointing up and away then proceeded to push the safety off so I could open the bold, when I did this the rifle fired, but did so in a safe direction with no mishap. Everyone was a little startled but safe. I did not use the rifle the rest of the trip because of this. When we got back I called and shipped the rifle back to Remington. When they shipped it back it the letter said there was nothing wrong with it and the rifle was fine. I was not sure what to say to that, but I still have the rifle but never felt comfortable again hunting with it. So it comes on trips but I do not use it. Now my question is, will Remington do the right thing and recall and fix these rifles so it will not happen again. It is pretty obvious that there is a problem where so many people have had the same experience with this rifle. Hike the rifle but have lost confidence in it being a safe rifle. I thought about selling it, but could not put someone else in at risk. Can you tell me what Remington has in mind to remedy this situation? My rifle serial number is A6553321, an early moldel from 1978. Thank you Sincereley Wayne Brossi wayne45acp@comcast.netwayne45acp@comcast.net>
