9/6/11 Per letter with rifle, on 5/27/09 Bain & Davis converted the 700 ADL to a BDL. Harrision supplied a Brown Precision stock, they glass bedded it, free floated the barrel, recrowned it at 11 degrees and did a trigger job. On his antelope hunt in Oct 2009 the gun misfired. It fired when he closed the bolt. He found debris from the bedding job, cleaned it and took it to the range a half dozen times to test it. He did not experience anymore failures. Then in late 2010 it happened again. He took it back to Bain & Davis and they made some adjustments and said it was safe. It's doing it again.cm

Remington Representative:

On 05/27/09, I had Remington factory representative Bain & Davis in Southern, California, convert my Remington model 700 from an ADL model to a BDL model. I supplied a Brown Precision Stock: they glass bedded it, free floated the barrel, re-crowned it at 11 degrees, did a trigger job, etc.

On my antelope hunt in October of that year, the gun misfired. It fired when I closed the bolt. Believe it or not- I killed the antelope. I examined the gun and found debris from the bedding job; cleaned it and took it to the range a half dozen times to test it. I did not experience any more failures. Then in late 2010, it happened again. I took the gun back to Bain & Davis. They did an exam, adjustments, and repairs and pronounced the gun safe... WRONG! It's doing it again. I noticed it seems to happen when I don't recycle the bolt strong enough to the rear. Something does not reset. The trigger?... the bolt?... I don't know. What I do know is that it is not safe- it's having a "Remington moment". I know of this gun's reputation with trigger failure. A factory representative should be able to adjust it appropriately. If not, please "give" me one of your new X-Mark Pro triggers. Please check out anything else that could be causing this problem.

Thank you,

William Harrison
