

Oct. 16, 89

- 2 -

the general quality. I actually would feel disappointed if I were a first time rifle buyer and got the one which I received. There is sort of a "boring" with new rifles.

More than likely time looking and saving money went into the purchase. The things which I listed definitely would put a damper on the new rifle experience.

I do not like form letters. To have my letter returned marked Form letter #1

Im/700 lets me know that I'm one of many and this problem will not be addressed on an alone basis but as one of many. I would like to, at least, have had the fantasy that my problem was going to be handled by someone who cared. Do the attached give you that feeling?

Here in D.A. hunting season is here. I will not be sending my ADL to Bennington. I may want to use it or I may not but I want the choice. The rifle does shoot well and I like the look. It will probably become my "mountain" rifle for out west. For some reason I've taken a shine to it. Probably like a puppy that whines when you first bring it home. By the way my wife is against me owning another rifle. She feels one is enough. She doesn't understand pride of ownership and I make the mistake of