

that I am accustomed to without luck. I would enjoy any recommendations you could offer.

The ad which I feel portrays this new style of Remington features an elk in the forefront of the picture and describes the challenge of hunting the elk requiring the strength of a Remington to meet the challenge. Well I'm not an expert on elk hunting - I have to work hard at it - I've only shot four elk in the four years that I've lived in Idaho - but those four elk were all tough, hard challenging hunts - and no place to take a rifle that would not hold up. But that rifle has to be not only hardy, durable and reliable - but also my best friend when I'm out there alone - something I can count on 100% of the time - when I'm soaking wet and slipped and fallen down a mountain or two and have none of the same to look forward to. Then when I take down a rifle to go hunting I take something down that I've put a lot of thought and careful consideration into and not just shelling out money for. - Elk hunting is one of the hardest and most physical requiring hunting that I have ever experienced. I am always looking for new ways to improve on it and experience it more fully. At this time however I could not recommend or would buy another Remington to use.

Sincerely

George M. Lee
Lewiston, Id.