

so I wouldn't have to unload it through the action. The owner of the store also said he worked on the rifle and that I shouldn't have any more problems.

The following fall I took it to the range and shot a few boxes of shells with out a mishap mishap. That big game season in a tree stand I was ready to unload the rifle. I pushed the safety to F, and that's exactly what happened the rifle fired. It was cold and windy that evening and my hands were cold, after the shock of the firing I could not remember if I had my finger on the trigger or not. I convinced myself that's what happened.

This season I took my rifle to the range and fired a few boxes of shells. Every time I fired I put the safety to On, then to Off to see if it would discharge. This was
