Attention Consumer Relations Department

I am the once proud owner of a Remington .270 model 700BDL rifle (Serial number B6589888). Short and to the point -- this gun is dangerous. Three times this gun has fired when the safety was removed. The first time I shot my Bronco through the floor board. The second time I was pulling the gun up to my shoulder, about to drop a deer, the gun fired when the safety was removed and kicked me in the ribs with enough force to bruise two ribs and almost knock me off my deer stand, 20 feet above the ground. The last time was a few days ago when I was target shooting. The gun went off with the butt on my shoulder, and, although it only caught me off guard, scared the hell out of me (as it did the previous two times). I will not shoot this gun again until something has been done to make this firearm safe.

Because of my affiliation in law enforcement and my past admiration for Remington as a fine maker of firearms, I have yet to approach a lawyer in this manner, but be assured that if I do not receive a positive response from Remington, I will take legal action.
