I guess we will have to get Ted and Wayne to try to stimulate some of the writers who seem to have forgotten about the XP-100. We had real good coverage a year or so ago but it seemed to have been abandoned now. For example, in the June issue of GUN World there are two articles on high power pistols, neither of which makes mention or comparison to the XP-100, although one article entitled "Caribou with the Hawkeye" (Ruger) includes reference to game killed with what appears to be a single shot pistol in Caliber 257 which was converted from a Remington rolling block action.

Perhaps in order to stir up interest we will have to make some technical changes, or added caliber or the like, in order to provide some copy for the writers to use.
