Mr. President,

I own one of the 660 Remington Rifles which are being recalled. I called the water line number that you have and to my dismay and dislike, the operator asked me for my serial number so that she might enter it in a computer. I fail to see why she must have my number in a computer just to refer me to a gunsmith to have it installed. All that must be done is for the gunsmith to look at the rifle, see if it falls within the recall range and install the trigger. For that matter I can install the trigger myself or good as any gunsmith around - probably better than most.

I am opposed to having any of my rifle serial numbers entered into a computer for any reason as these magnetic tapes can fall into the wrong hands. What safeguards does Remington have against the misuse of these computer tapes? For all we know the terminal may be hooked up to the BATF.

I know this sounds like a paranoid gun "freak", but if one looks back at our freedom erosion in the last 20 years, it is readily justifiable.

I am a competitive Rifle and pistol shooter and I own two Remington Match Rifles of which I have had no trouble with. In fact I have nothing but high praise for them. I would appreciate your giving me the address of where I might get my trigger replaced or send me one to replace myself. I will send you a sworn, witnessed statement that my rifle is in the recall range if you require proof. Thank you for your time, I remain

Very truly yours

P.S. Maybe this could be handled through the N.R.A.
