

recall

Discussion Thread

Response (Chris)
Dear Mr. Cline,

10/20/2003 2:39:19 PM

Thank you for contacting Remington Country. We would need the serial number of the rifle in question to check recall information. Models with the bolt-lock, where you have to have the gun on fire to open the bolt, were produced before 1982. A brand new Model 700 would not have a bolt lock. Many people try to alter the trigger pull on their rifles and this or maintenance could cause what you have described. We would need to inspect the rifle and advise the owner not to use it again until it can be inspected.

To view more information on the bolt-lock, go to:

http://www.remington.com/Safety_Modification_Program/remington_safety.htm

Customer (jason cline)

10/16/2003 1:08:55 AM i have a question concerning your recall on bolt action rifles. im a hunting guide in montana and a few weeks ago one of our hunters had a brand new remington 700 in the 7mm ultra mag. apparently you have to leave the gun off safety to chamber a round, well the hunter pointed the gun in a safe direction and closed the bolt, as soon as he did the gun went off, (slam-fire). needless to say the guide standing in front of him wasnt thrilled about this. what is going on with your rifles? i personally only buy remington firearms and just bought a remington bdl ss 300 ultra mag this year. i am concernd about this and want a straight answer, is something being done about this? was it just an isolated incident? should i be worried about my rifle malfunctioning? thank you for taking the time to answer my question.

jason cline, gardiner,mt