Subject: Snipersonline: Remington Triggers

Hey guys, I don't chime in much but I've been watching all the commentary on the Remington trigger issue and spoke with Rick Johnson of Remington Law Enforcement Product Services today about everyone's experiences. I explained the experiences of those who subscribe to Snipersonline and he explained that he was aware of the discussion and has actually talked with several of you. He further explained that of those he has spoken with he has asked "who modified your trigger" where dead silence follows with a reply of "how did you now we had our triggers worked on!"

Additionally, he has asked if those persons could produce a rifle shot log so that they might study the rifles history, maintenance etc. and nobody has been willing or able to produce such records.

Guys I assure you that I have known Rick for years and his concerns and dedication to producing quality safe products for law enforcement are genuine. He has always gone to the Nth degree to solve Remington related problems for me, going as far as to loan me a complete rifle while one of ours is down. He remains concerned but, I must also ask, how many of those who have experienced this problem have had trigger modifications? Also, I'm not the greatest at keeping the most accurate shot log, but along with your data book these items are crucial if heaven forbid an accident would to occur. Of course you can always do what I have done and replace your Remington safety with a Winchester Model 70 three position safety.
Just food for thought.
