>We have had two accidental discharge incidents involving a Remington 700 adl. In one incident my son was shot in the foot. That is documented in the hospital records and was investigated by the Butte, Montana police department. The second incident was when the same boy was unloading the same weapon in our frontroom when the rifle discharged. That is recorded in the carpet under the couch, through the rug and the hole is still in the cement floor. There were seven people who witnessed that incident. We are wondering what to do with this information in light of the recent death of one of our fellow Montanans. We have also seen the information about the Texas man who lost a foot. What is the best way to handle this information? Should we contact a lawyer or should we keep this between you and ourselves? Awaiting your prompt response. Frank Waddell.
